February 2020

#SingaporeTogether: Caring for our Client Community

“As a proud contributor to the Singapore Community, Mercer is truly striving to live our purpose of making a difference, to our colleagues, clients and community.

The health and safety of our clients and your employees during this challenging time remains a prime concern, and we have put our best teams forward to support you address key questions on managing and limiting the impact on your people and businesses.

Since COVID-19 risk alert levels in Singapore have been raised to DORSCON orange, you have asked for practical advice around managing employee queries including:

- Working from home arrangements and other flexible working alternatives

- Medical coverage whilst working from home, and personal travel
- Pay and rewards during quarantine
- Considerations for adjustments related to business impact
- Application of annual and sick leave policies in view of quarantine periods

Our pulse survey covers practices that businesses in Singapore are applying to the listed topics and more.

Across nearly 30 industries, over 250 survey participants have shared your plans and policies to enable learning across industry peers.

We thank you for your responses which provides a view of business readiness in Singapore.”

Over half of the respondents have a business continuity / pandemic readiness plan, and have started to implement it

- It is never too late to prepare and implement a business continuity / pandemic preparedness plan.
- Adaptive working (split teams, work from home or alternative sites) is key to ensure the entire workforce will not be unavailable at any point in time during a pandemic.
- Focus should be on health and safety of employees, hence a thorough review of medical and travel coverage is required.
- Where possible pay and jobs of employees should be protected, support of employers is available through several government grants and initiatives.

Status of business continuity planning
